Description

Large Victorian Glass Ship's Inkwell.

This antique cut-glass inkwell, dating from the Victorian era, is a beautifully crafted writing accessory featuring elegant brass hinged fittings and intricate hand-cut detailing. The glass body is squat in form with a low center of gravity and adorned with a delicate floral and leaf pattern, complemented by striking star-cut designs on both the lid and base.

A distinctive double-hinged brass lid offers practical versatility: opening one way reveals a small glass ink tray, while opening the other allows the tray to be removed, providing access to a larger ink reservoir beneath.

Designed for use with a quill or dip pen, perfect for anyone who loves vintage pen and writing equipment. This inkwell combines functionality with refined decorative craftsmanship, making it both a practical writing piece and a charming collector's item.
