Description

Oil Painting Of A Shooting Party.

A wonderful fine 19th century oil on canvas of a shooting party. Framed in a large maple frame with gold slip, this stunning primitive oil has been done by a very proficient and accomplished unknown artist. The colourful atmospheric oil shows a calm, pastoral outdoor scene. At the center, a group of well-dressed men are gathered near the gate to an estate, dressed in coats, breeches, boots and top hats. Two horses flank the group: a white horse on the left being held by one man, and a brown horse on the right standing saddled and ready, several hunting dogs are clustered near the men. The men all appear engaged in conversation, two at the center are holding shot guns. Behind them, the landscape opens into a soft, green backdrop with trees and a large estate or manor house in the distance. The architecture and setting suggest wealth and status, and the overall tone of the painting emphasizes leisure, tradition, and rural aristocratic life. The composition is balanced and orderly, with warm, earthy tones dominating the palette. The detailed rendering of clothing, animals, and foliage gives the scene a refined, almost storytelling quality, capturing a snapshot of genteel country life centered around sport and companionship.
